Note From President

Dear Community Members,

We are thrilled to present our 2024 Carnation Chamber Directory, showcasing the incredible diversity of businesses in the greater Carnation area.

From longstanding establishments to emerging ventures, this directory is a treasure trove of local resources. Whether you seek professional services, unique retail experiences, farm-fresh produce, restaurants, exquisite wines, craft beers, or live music performances, you'll find them all here!

Let's unite in supporting our local businesses, farms, and non-profits, and nurturing the growth of our community. Take a dive into the directory and uncover the richness of our town's offerings.

Carnation is thriving! We are happy you can join us!

Chamber Mission

The Chamber of Commerce is dedicated to supporting and building businesses in Carnation, Washington. By doing that we strengthen our community.

Introduction

The lower Snoqualmie Valley cities of Carnation, Fall City, Preston, and Duvall are vibrant small towns each with its own natural beauty, heritage, and recreational opportunities. In each town you can visit the unique shops and restaurants.

Valley History

The Snoqualmie Valley is a region in Washington state, known for its rich history and stunning natural beauty. Originally inhabited by the Snoqualmie Tribe, European settlers began arriving in the mid-19th century, drawn by the fertile land and abundant natural resources. The valley's economy has been shaped by logging, farming, and later, tourism. Today, it's a popular destination for outdoor enthusiasts, offering hiking, trail walking, biking, and water activities plus picturesque views of the Cascade Mountains. Be sure to visit one of our valley's historical museums for more information on how our beautiful hometowns came to life.

BIKE TRAILS OF CARNATION

See City of Carnation for map*

The Snoqualmie Valley is a Mountain biking adventure, with world class trails through parks and the beautiful back country. The Snoqualmie Trail is the longest trail in King County at 31.7 miles long. If you're an extreme adventurer the Palouse to Cascades Trail stretches across our beautiful state following the old rail corridor. The Palouse to Cascade Trail is 285 miles long starting at Cedar Falls and ending at the Idaho border. There are also many local bike shops to take care of all your biking needs.

A VALUED CLIENT
TESTIMONIAL YOU CAN TRUST

"I can't speak highly enough of Maria Barrett our real estate agent. Finding a realtor who is personable and reliable is a challenging venture on its own. One who can seek out a dream home while simultaneously selling a previous residence even more so. Despite a volatile housing market and a niche, higher-end demographic, Maria Barrett was able to achieve both of these tasks exceptionally and swiftly. Her ability to market and cater to the needs of the client is second-to-none as she was able to sell our old house with immediacy and far above market price. Her attention to detail and prompt paperwork processing allowed us to move in record time. With a gorgeous waterfront view, beautiful property, and an amazing home, we have finally achieved our dream with the hard work of Maria Barrett. "

Stillborn. Still Loved.

WHO WE ARE

Loved by Lincoln is a 501(c)(3) WA nonprofit organization dedicated to providing comfort and resources to bereaved parents who have experienced a miscarriage, stillbirth, or infant loss.

OUR MISSION

Loved by Lincoln's primary mission is to provide families experiencing a pregnancy, or infant loss with comfort by donating a stuffed animal to local hospitals, so that no bereaved parent has to leave with empty arms.

In addition, through education and resources, we hope to advocate awareness concerning pregnancy and infant loss, in an effort to normalize and reduce the stigma around this topic.

Elk in the Valley

We have large herds of elk in the valley. Early morning and dusk are the ideal times to see the elk. Be sure to always observe the elk from a distance. If observing outside of your car talk quietly and move slowly. Never come between a mother and her offspring, never disturb any animals in mating season, especially bull elk in the fall rutting season. If the elk moves away that is a sign of being nervous and you need to move away slowly. Elk are WILD, keep your distance, never approach, never feed or pet. Be sure to bring binoculars and don't forget your camera. Absolutely no drone flying over the elk herds.

Fall City-Cityed: A Mecca for Mountain Bikers

by Kate Grossman

With its proximity to the Snoqualmie River and the Cascades, Fall City is a gateway from the East Side into the great outdoors. One nearby natural playground has grown substantially over the last decade as hikers, equestrians, trail runners, and particularly mountain bikers all increasingly utilize the “Tokul West” and “Tokul East” trails north-east of town. Recreationists access the trails from two primary points in Fall City: via Fall City Community Park and SE 39th Place and the parking lot on the Snoqualmie Valley Trail (SVT) on 356th Dr. SE. Campbell Global, a timber and forest management company based in Portland, owns the majority of the forest housing the Tokul trails to the north of the SVT, and King County owns land on 356th that currently houses a parking lot on each side of the road. The county purchased those 85 acres of land in 2021 to “be managed for conservation value, trail-based recreation, and public use.” Specifically, the parcel is “potentially [to] be developed as a trailhead and parking area for access to mountain biking trails and the Snoqualmie Valley Trail.” The area has a long history of transferred ownership and mixed use. Many of the trails were originally built as horse trails climbing into the timber land above the Snoqualmie River, and over the past few decades, many of these hillside trails have been optimized and maintained for mountain biking. According to the Evergreen Mountain Bike Alliance and trailforks.com, more than 85 bike trails wind more than 34 miles between the Tokul East and Tokul West areas. They are the fourth and fifth most popular riding destinations in King County behind Duthie Hill, Tiger Mountain, and the Raging River State Forest. Popularity of the Tokul trails has grown in recent years as more trails have been built and access to the trails has improved. While anyone with a permit is allowed to use the trails, mountain bikers are the most frequent users. Peak ridership at Tokul typically occurs in the winter, sometimes up to a couple thousand riders a month, when bikers can’t access trails at higher elevations. “Tokul fills a special and unique niche with its old school trails and good winter [bike] riding while other trails may be under snow. [It’s] a space that the mountain bike community takes pride in maintaining with the land managers,” says Vivika Stamolis with Evergreen Mountain Bike Alliance. Headquartered in North Bend, they are the largest statewide mountain bike association in the United States. While there are restrictions on building new trails in the Snoqualmie Forest, maintenance of existing trails is legal and new construction is allowed with Campbell Global’s approval. “We support all legal and responsible mountain biking in Washington, including Tokul,” says Stamolis. The Tokul trails are maintained entirely by volunteers and independent riders. As with any growth in recreation in and around Fall City, there are positive and negative consequences to the increased use of the area.

While recreationists bring more tourism to the businesses in Fall City and certainly more attention to the natural resources in the area, the growth in use has caused some consternation for neighbors whose properties abut the SVT and the entry points to the Tokul Trails system. In addition to the increased traffic and human impact, not all visitors are aware of the regulations, trail etiquette, and safety concerns inherent to activity on shared, multi-use trails. The SVT is open year-round for daytime use, though the Tokul Trails are closed when fire danger is high, and all trails are open only to non-motorized recreation with speeds limited to 15 miles per hour. While equestrians always receive right of way, bikes are supposed to cede the right of way to any pedestrians. Shared trail users should communicate and slow down when passing others, particularly with those on horseback to avoid frightening horses and endangering all involved. For all outdoor pursuits, of course, safety is a paramount issue, both from the activities themselves as well as from wildlife.

One experienced mountain biker died in 2021 after a crash in the Tokul East area, and the trails were national news in February, when a 75-pound male cougar, less than a year old, attacked an adult female cyclist riding with a group. The other four cyclists in the group fought off and pinned down the animal with their bikes, and the victim is now recovering from her injuries. The Washington Department of Fish and Wildlife (WDFW) put down the attacking cougar and increased police patrols in the area following the attack. Incidents like these are accidents by definition and thankfully rare. In the past hundred years, the WDFW reports only twenty cougar attacks and two cougar-related deaths in the state. However, despite the relatively low frequency, safety measures should be taken to minimize risks on the trails. If biking, wear a helmet. In any activity, keep children close and pets leashed. The WDFW also recommends recreating in a group whenever possible, making noise as you travel, and avoiding activities at dawn or twilight. They also recommend carrying bear spray or an air horn for deterrence. Like Fall City's other parks and the rivers, the trails above town are seeing substantial use, and it's increasingly from visitors coming from outside of the Snoqualmie Valley. But for those enjoying the outdoors, as locals or as visitors, understanding the safety and etiquette of multiuse areas is critical to enabling continued accessibility to those shared trails. For those interested in exploring the trails, the SVT is public land managed by King County, but the Tokul Trails above the SVT are on private property. Signs are posted on the trails, but permits are required for any recreational access. Annual permits are available for $75 as of April 1st and extend through March 30 of the following year and can be used by an individual or family. Day permits are available for $12, and information on both can be found at cgcreationpermit.com

Sharing the trails can be a point of contention between bikers, horseback riders, and hikers. Understanding and simple courtesy make exploring the trails a pleasure for everyone.
